A BRIEF HISTORY

Known in medieval times as a busy sea food market, Fossgate today continues the tradition of food in the form of some of the best restaurants in York (many still offering seafood) along with a variety of shops, deli's, bars and cafes.

The house of three stories and attics was built in the late seventeenth century on a large irregular plan, widening out at the back and remodelled with a new frontblock in 1720. A late nineteenth century shop front was added and altered in 1928 for George Mason whose monogram can still be seen on the front of the building.

We know how important history is, especially to York, so to make sure the history of the building lives on we have kept a lot of the original lettering, which can still be spotted around the place!
